8 letter dated 10 Sept 1896 from Rowland Jackson, 4603 Haverford Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (My grandfather's Windles brother) to his son, Charles^W Jackson, Binghamton, N. Y.

"I cannot give you the names of my ancestors except a few. On father's side it is thus: A Jackson married a Howard. She was the daughter of one of the Duke of Norfolk's sons. She told me her father was disfranchised because he embraced the Protestant religion. The Howards were Catholics, are yet.

The Jackson side was the side of an Irishman who was also kicked out of home because he embraced the Protestant religion. He married my grandmother, or father's mother. Grandmother had one sister and twelve brothers, all large powerful men and all were in the cavalry service known as the Oxford Blues. While drilling, the horse of one reared up and fell backward on him and killed him. The other eleven were all at the battle of Waterloo under the Duke of Norfolk who commanded part of the Duke of Wellington's army that defeated Napoleon Bonaparte. Two of them returned cavalrymen, became noted cotton manufacturers. One of them became very rich, Jesse Howard at Stockport in Cheshire. He never married and his brothers children stuck very close to him and became the managers of his big cotton mills and 800 houses. They became rich and would have servants as spies watching through cracks and holes when grandmother went to see him or my father called to see him for fear the old man would sign some paper that would give some part of his estate to us. He was old, about 70 when I was 8 or 10 years old. I never saw him but once. Grandmother's sister married a man named Garlick, they had a large farm on a hillside. I often went with grandmother when a young boy. My grandmother used to tell me what became of the other brothers, some died early but all were tillers of the soil in early manhood.

Well my grandmother Jackson was never forgotten by the Howard family. Once or twice a year the Duke would come a hunting with a pack of hounds and many other gents. All had fine blooded hunting horses. One of the Duke's valets would bring a fine horse for grandmother. Soon the Duke would be along and she would join him in the chase, making her horse jump fences and ditches after the hounds. It used to please the Duke to see his cousin 80 years old on the best horse he had ahead of every other rider in the chase. She was 86 old when she last rode to the chase. Well she lost her husband when my father was a boy about 14 years old. Her husband had gone about 12 miles to Stockport market with a brig load of wool to sell. He did not sell it so started back home with it. It rained and snowed hard from noon till well into the night, a dismal day and about ten that night the horses and cart came into the farm yard with no man with it. After putting the horses up in the stable, father and his brother John turned the tarpaulin off the wool and there was their father wet and frozen to death. He had crept under the cover to keep out of the storm. About six miles from home there was a fording of a small creek. The horses went through all night for the water was not too high but coming back he had to lead the horses through that. My father had one sister Betty and three brothers Joseph, John and James and my father Rowland. I will tell you about your mother's side in another letter

signed R. Jackson

HOWARD.

Walter Howard (1759-1830) was the son of Wm. Howard who claimed kinship with the Ducal families and was supported in his claim by the ninth duke Edward Howard (1686-1777). Walter was sent to college, but being a Protestant, was later withdrawn. The new duke became his friend but the 11th duke rejected the claim. However there was some support from the 12th duke. Walter Howard died without heirs. The disfranchised Howard in Rowland's letter could have referred to a younger brother of Walter Howard. Or Walter Howard could have been one of the twelve brothers mentioned, making the Howard lady who married a Jackson a granddaughter of possibly the Ninth Duke.

The children of the Jackson-Howard marriage were
